FORTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT*

1918

THREE years ago the oldest members of this present graduating class were blue-garbed probationers just beginning what was to them then, and still is, the greatest undertaking of their lives, — a course of training preparatory to entering one of the most active and prominent professions among women, — professional nursing. A field which has always held its attractions and opportunities, it presented to the members of this class and its successors an appeal which was more thrilling and more impelling than had ever before come to a group of young women.

Although we little dreamed at that time that we should all be involved in this great War, nevertheless it is safe to say that consciously or otherwise, a large proportion of this class were stimulated in beginning their training, in order to be of service should there be an opening into the War for women equipped with hospital training. During the three years that stimulus has not diminished; rather has it increased to such an extent that doubtless the all-absorbing purpose of each pupil has been to finish her course, and with her brothers enter the fight against the worst tyranny that has ever gripped humanity.

The place of nurses in these history-making years is a prominent one, and a particularly personal one to this Training School, because Miss Parsons, our Superintendent, with over fifty of our graduates, formed one of the first hospital units to go to France after this country had joined its forces with the Allies, and which is now, after a year and a half of active service, still doing a tremendous piece of work on the other side. But this represents in numbers a small part of what this School has done. Three years ago, over a year before our country had taken arms against the foe, there were thirty-four of our graduates doing war nursing at the front with either the French or British forces. Since then over two hundred of our Alumnae have entered active service with either the French or British, or for the most part with the American Forces either at home or abroad. It is worthy of note that one class alone, the class of 1916, has had twenty-seven of its members, over fifty per cent of the entire class, in active service.

* Read at the graduation exercises Jan. 14, 1919.

Such a beginning and such an accomplishment has been the inheritance of this present class, more truly a war class than almost any other, and if there is any regret among its members to-day, it is that they could not have graduated earlier in order to have put their shoulders to the wheel before the struggle was over.

Devastation and disaster are not the only effects of war. Of those we are conscious; but at this distance another general result is even more conspicuous, — a wider vision and a greater sympathy for others than we have yet had. I doubt if ever a class graduated from this School, in the forty-five years of its history, that has had a greater longing to be of real use in the world, — a world much larger than their own individual experiences, or than the scope of this Training School with its more than twelve hundred graduates. One of the outlets for this ambition and enthusiasm is the Nursing Service of the Red Cross with its varied activities at home and abroad, in times of peace as well as in times of war. It rightly claims the attention and coöperation of every nurse who graduates from her hospital training school into the larger usefulness of society.

The calls for the Red Cross nurse will not die with the coming of peace. So great are the demands for well-trained women in the various Public Health fields that the Red Cross is already laying extensive plans to enable its Nursing Service to extend in these directions. They need more women for visiting and educational work in rural communities, more school nurses, and nurses in the great industries, more child welfare and social service nurses. This is true in every branch of Public Health service.

At present our training schools throughout the country do far too little in including preparation in these lines for pupil nurses; but this lack is recognized, and we need but the necessary funds to include more of it in our courses of training. The Boston Metropolitan Chapter of the Red Cross has for the past year contributed sixty scholarships for pupil nurses, for the four months' course under the District Nursing Association. These scholarships include room and board, as well as tuition and practice work, thus relieving the hospitals of all expense for the pupils while taking the course.

Our Training School has been most fortunate in securing twelve of these scholarships this year. Four seniors took the course last fall. Four of this graduating class will finish it in February, and another group of four will follow them. It is sincerely hoped that the Metropolitan Chapter will renew the opportunity for another year, and that in some way such an arrangement may become a permanent feature of our curriculum. But because only a few nurses can benefit by such a thorough course, there is on foot at present a plan for a course of Public Health lectures which may be supported by a number of hospitals in Boston for the joint benefit of their senior nurses.

Other affiliations which we continue to include in the three years' training are with the Wesson Maternity Hospital in Springfield, the Boston Lying-In Hospital, the McLean Hospital, and the Eye and Ear Infirmary. Our pupils in these institutions, together with those on duty in the Phillips House and in the Social Service Departments, make a total of about sixty-six nurses, chiefly from the senior and intermediate classes, who are not serving in the Hospital or Out-Patient Departments, and yet who are undergraduate members of the Training School.

Our census at the close of 1918 showed two hundred and thirty (230) pupils, including probationers, ten affiliated or post-graduate pupils from other schools, and a staff of twenty-six graduates, making a total of two hundred and sixty-six (266). To-day this number has been increased by a new class of twenty-five probationers, who tomorrow will begin their three-year course of instruction and practice.

Two pupils of the class of 1918 have been allowed to finish their training elsewhere; one in Richmond, Virginia, where she is doing special work in Public Health lines, and one in Greece. The latter accompanied a recent relief commission which went across at the request of the Greek Government.

As was the case in 1917, so again during 1918, there were many changes on the Training School staff, due chiefly to the number of nurses entering military service. Eleven graduates have left the Hospital in this way during the year: Dora M. Clark, 1911; May Warner, 1916; Marion Mantius, 1917; Ruth Morgan, 1918; Mary M. Craighill, 1918; Elizabeth Thompson, 1918; Kathleen Parks, 1917; Corine Samuelson, 1913; Adele Richardson, 1914; Bertha Wheeler, 1915; Agnes Dunn, 1917; Mary M. Loomis, 1917. We were proud to have as many go, and yet would show our great appreciation for the effort and devotion of those who remained here to "carry on." The Red Cross realizing the necessity of keeping our Training Schools running as smoothly and efficiently as possible, and desirous of not calling into military service nurses who were doing more important work at home, last fall issued "special service" chevrons to Red Cross nurses eligible for active service, but who because of the importance of their positions should not be called for military duty. Eleven of our staff were granted such distinction; and well did they deserve it, for the year has had many difficulties, and but for the splendid spirit of coöperation among graduates and pupils alike the obstacles and trials of administration would have been almost insurmountable.

Four times during the year has a serious epidemic of sickness visited the School. Each time those not stricken had double or even treble work and responsibility, and never once did we hear of any spirit of complaining, but only a willingness to buckle down and do a little more to help relieve the situation. The fall epidemic of influenza was particularly severe, both because eight-five (85) of the pupils in the School contracted the disease, and because half the Hospital was given over to the care of Influenza patients, which meant as continuously hard nursing as it has ever been the duty of any pupil nurse to perform. The situation was so serious that it was necessary to secure help through the Red Cross. Other graduate nurses who could do so came to offer their assistance, and several of our Nurses' Aids who had had some experience on the wards volunteered their services, and proved without question, by their helpfulness and willingness, that in cases of just such emergencies they can fill a very definite place on our hospital wards.

Again, during this recent secondary influenza epidemic we have been glad and grateful for the Aids who came forward and offered their services.

The year has meant more breaks by death in our ranks of graduates than we have ever had in so short a period, the larger number being due to influenza. It is with great sorrow that we make particular mention of the loss of three members of the class of 1916, all of whom were in Army Service in France,—Lucy N. Fletcher, Frances E. Bartlett, Nellie J. Ward,—and of one pupil nurse in her first year of training. The latter, Ruth Chamberlain, although a young nurse, will always be remembered by her classmates and teachers as one so devoted to her work that no task was too small to demand from her all the infinite care and patience necessary to bring that task to a perfect completion.

Of special interest to the nursing world has been the organization, this summer, of the Army School of Nursing with its assignments of pupil nurses to various cantonment hospitals in this country. One of the first assignments was to Camp Devens, and Miss McCrae was temporarily released from service here to start their classes in practical nursing. Due to the cessation of hostilities, these schools will gradually be discontinued, and those pupils desirous of completing a course in nursing will be assigned to civil hospitals.

Another movement of interest was the intensive prenursing course for college graduates given at Vassar College this summer, from which nearly five hundred students entered training schools throughout the country this fall. Eight of them were admitted to this School, and will receive credit on their course for the work done at Vassar.

Year by year, as our School develops along educational lines, we have many new problems to consider,—the problems of instruction, of shorter working hours for the nurses, and of supervised recreation. Living conditions that were adequate five years ago no longer are sufficient, and a new nurses' home with laboratories, class and study rooms, seems almost an imperative need. Running expenses for salaries, and equipment necessary for an efficient up-to-date training school of to-day, would far exceed what our already overburdened Hospital can do for us; and the only solution of the situation is an Endowment Fund of sufficient size, that we may have a regular income available at least for purely academic purposes.

For some years our graduates have felt this need, and have been contributing a nucleus for just such a fund. This sum at present amounts to about five thousand dollars ($5000), a small amount, but representative of the loyalty and devotion of hundreds of Alumnae whose gifts are the expression of a wish that future classes may be able to enjoy privileges denied to those of earlier years. It is to be hoped that in the near future generous friends of the Training School or of individual nurses may wish to show their appreciation of our aims and of our accomplishments in substantial gifts to this Endowment Fund.

As we look forward to the near future, realizing that we are no longer preparing to hear the call of war and battle, our chief desire is to see again our Alumnae who have been at the front, and most of all Miss Parsons, whose interest in our every-day affairs has been as keen as if the separation had been but for a short time. And together we rejoice that another graduation will see her back in her accustomed place among us.

HELEN WOOD,

Acting Superintendent of Nurses.
